

U.S. Tunes In to Red Wave

You may think of America as the home of rock 'n roll. But there are rock bands everywhere. Now you can hear, on radio or MTV, rock from Russia! Joanna Stingray, a U.S. musician and producer, visited the Soviet Union and brought back music from four rock bands. Available on an album called Red Wave, the music is not all that different from rock music in the U.S. Stingray told SN, "I'm trying to make a bond between the two countries." Soviet band Kino sings these words, translated:

"I am singing for those who go their own way. I am glad if someone understood me."
